etings of Respect Held in Various Places-An Eloquent Eulogy at the Cotton Exchange.

The Stars and Stripes were in mourning esterday. The death of President Garfield erceptibly affected business and those who engage in it. There was a nameless sadness in the air, and men and women felt de-pressed all day. There was a conviction that something had "ceased to breathe along the face of things." There was even in the sun-shine an element of the pathetic, and the bright day contained the melancholy touch of autumn. Groups of men all day long could be seen discussing the death of the Chief Magistrate, and now that the end has come men are even more saddened than they had ever expected to be. DECORATIONS.

in deterence to the sad death of the Presi-lent many of the public buildings and any number of stores were draped in mourning. The Courthouse presented all the appearance of a house of mourning. Long lines of black crape hung from window to window. The inside of the building also had the proper evidences of sorrow. Over the doors of the court-rooms and offices white and black drapery was placed. court-rooms and offices white and black drapery was placed.

Some of the stores were draped very handsomely. Kremer's had donned mourning, and had crape extended from window to window. Lowensteins had several large flags of our country, with mourning wrapped about them, hanging up the face of the building. The stationhouse, the various magistrates offices, the newspaper offices, bore evidences of the general sorrow. Main street, from one end to another, had put on the ontward semblance of woe. Business was not stopped, but there was a hush upon the streets, and the hearts of the people grieved at the death of the statesman and patriot whom Democrat and Republican had learned to love and honor. And all day long the melancholy honor. And all day long the melancholy bells were tolling, and telling the sorrow that

When the Circuit Court opened yesterday Judge Tom Brown arose and made a most feeling little address, entirely impromptu, over President Garfield's death. He was followed by Judge Heiskell in a few tasteful remarks.

On motion of Judge Brown the following was entered on the minutes of the Court:

Resolved, That this Court and the bar of Memphis have received with profoundest sorrow the intelligence of the death of the Chief Magistrate of this Republic. We recognize that in the death of James A. Garfield, the country has sustained a bereavement rarely allotted to a nation or people. In the merits of the man, in the virtues of the officer, and the bright hopes inspired by his assumption of authority as the Chief Executive of the nation, the country has found all that solicities.

to attest our honor for the illustrious dead, and our sympathy for the nation in the great loss sustained in the lamentable termination of so auspicious a career by the assassin's bullet.

On motion of C. W. Heiskell, seconded by G. W. Gordon, it was ordered that the Court adjourn until this morning at 9:30 o'clock.

Yesterday afternoon at 3 o'clock a large and interesting meeting was held at the Cotton Exchange, at which the representative business men and citizens of Memphis were present. HON. CASEY YOUNG oaid the following cloquent tribute to the othe subjects of private or public concern which it is usual to present for the action of the Cotton Exchange, I should decline this courieous juvitation to undertake the expression of the views and sentiments which either I or those who hear me may entertain; but as you have assembled at the demands of an occasion the suddest and most startling in all the history of our country, and of a calamity the shadow of which falls upon fifty millions of people and darkens half a continent, I feet that my past relations with its distinguished but unfortunate victim not only rothers it proper but imposes upon me the duty of saying a few words, though conscious that they would be more fity and more cloquently spaken by many others whom you might have called upon to address you. Death, in the midst of the sorrow and affliction which it brings, always softens the harsh asperities of life, smoothers its more unever and rugged zurface, and over the darker and mere forbidding phases of human nature it throws the goden drapery and incliow light of the purer inspirations of the mind, the softer and realise montions of the heart, and its yet unburled victim lies before the covered with the gloomy trappings and sombre vesture of the grave, our thoughts grow kinder and our judgment of his acts and conduct become more lenient if not more just. Thus it has often happened that men high in official character and position, and prominent in the conduct of public affairs, have had honors landed upon the more instituted which brought you here this eyeding is left this very hour from the shores of the Pacific to the beach of Long Bianek. The deep and genuine sorrow which you feel for the sad late, the untimely end of the great man, the distinguished statesman, the exalted ruler who now lies dead in the gloomy darkened cottage by the reading seed in the gloomy darkened cottage by the seaside, fills the hears of the butterness and enmity born of political strife are burled, the angry clamor of partisan rivals is hushed into sidence, and fifty both the youth and age of this entire country will admire and reverence the study manhoed, the unitring industry, and brave, courageous spirit which curried the humble work shop to the most exaited station on earth. I had many opportunities of knowing, during six vears of official and friendly personal intercourse, that use was much about General Garfield not only to command should be a supported in his statesmanship, the most conservative and liberal in his views, the most tolerant, generous and courteous to his opponents. Every act and measure of legislation demanded by public interest or necessity had his cordual and earnest support wherever its benefits allowed. When so support wherever its benefits allowed. When so many towns and cities of the South were just thousands deaths from the ravages of yellow-fever of 1878; when we were trembling with appreaension of its return and feeling how powerless vewere to prevent it, and the and of the Government was invoked, he was the most carness and elequent of all the advocates of the measure which was designed to give us that protection against succeeding epidemics which was so anxiously sought by those exposed to the danger of their return. This calamity, starling and overwhelming as it is, adds another to the thousand proofs formished by our hundred years of national life, that our government and institutions have a strength and vigor that will never the so compact and strongly built that no shock can disturb its perfect poise, and supported by the loyalty of the people, its administration will go on under a lawful succession until the public will, by the methods provided in the Constitution, shall place it in the hands of other agents.

HON. W. R. MOORE

a short time ago. We stand in the midst of a great national sorrow, indulged in by fifty millions of people, and it is the greatest compliment to our country that party passions should be forgotten and such beautiful eulogies pronounced upon him as that just spoken before me. It has been my good fortune to associate with the people of extreme Northeast, and nothing has done so much to wipe out sectional fueling with them as the expressions of sorrow of the Southern people. The life of President Garfield has become a household word. We all know from what obscurity he came. A boy of no means, springing from the humblest, he has risen to the highest ranks. It looks as if it were a great caismity, but I have no doubt that his successor is now peacefully installed. The man who now succeeds to the Presidency is a comparatively unknown man. He has been refuctant to take the position. Friends in New York have tried to push him forward, but he refused to do so. We need apprehend no danger from him. Things may change, men may come and men may go, but this Government will go on forever. At a meeting of the members of the Cot-ton Exchange yesterday, a committee was appointed to draft resolutions upon the death of Isaac M. Kirwan. The following report dence to remove from our midst by death Isaac M. Kirwan, an active member of this Exchange, be it

Resolved, That in his death this Exchange has suffered the loss of a zealous member has suffered the loss of a zealous member and the community a valuable citizen; that stricken down in the midst of an active and spoke shortly and appropriately as follows in substance:

stricken down in the midst of an active and useful career, we recognize in the deceased those sterling qualities which command the confidence and respect of the business community, and which in him gave promise of an honorable and successful life.

Resolved, That this Exchange tender to his family and friends its sincere condolence in their bereavement, and as a mark of respect for his memory, be it for his memory, be it

In yesterday's paper was a short review of the case of Sandy Carter. He was charged by Mrs. McCann with a peculiar offense. She handed him, as she thought, a one-dol-lar bill for vegetables and got fifteen cents in return. She says that she accidently gave him a ten-dollar bill, thinking it a one. As

ter) went to Mrs. McCann on the next morning after she said that she gave me a ten dollar bill for a one dollar bill, that I had refused to show her the ten dollar bill that I had changed for Mrs. Friedland. Please change above, and state that I did show ber the bill, and that she said that it was the very bill she (Mrs. McCann) gave me the day before. I then told her to come and go with me to Mrs. Friendland, and I would prove to her that I had just changed the bill with her twenty minutes before. She refused to go, and told me that she would have me arrested. I told that I would go with her at once to the stationhouse. Nothing had been said about the ten dollar bill before that time. Colored Man who Feels As

A CARD

We have come here to mingle our grief with the nation at large for the loss of James A. Garfield. While I feel as though it were a member of my own family, I think as well that I have some reason to rejoice. I rejoice that two-thirds of the members of the Cotton Exchange, who voted for another man, recognized General Garfield as the President. It gratified one to read in the morning papers that in him is lost the President of the whole people. I rejoice that the finger of scorn is pointed at the assassin. I don't believe there is a single man in the country who does not grieve for General Garfield. I believe that General Arthur, who is but slightly known in this country, will THE RESOLUTIONS.

MR. EDITOR—I noticed in this morning's paper that you said that when I (Sandy Carter) went to Mrs. McCanu on the next morning the court of the case was tended. THE RESOLUTIONS.

Whereas, It has pleased Almighty God in His mercy and wisdom to remove from among us our sible, particular and much-beloved President, James A. Garfield; new therefore be it.

Resolved, That we, the officers and members of the Memphis Cotton Exchange, hereby tender to his breaved family and friends our heartifelt sympathy and condelence, and to the country at large that profound sentiment of sorrow and regret, which must unite us all as a band of brothers givering over the untimely cutting off of a loved tather and friend.

Resolved, That in his death his family have lost a cherished father and husband, his associates an honest and loyal friend, and his country a patriot and a hero. To each and all of these his loss will be felt as a public and private calamity, and his memory will be kept green, not only in the record of his brilliant achievements, but in the sorrowing hearts of a grief-stricken nation.

Resolved, That these resolutions be published in the daily Memphis papers, and that a copy of same be forwarded both to his family and to the department of a grief-stricken nation.
